Spoken Language in Persons with Down Syndrome: A Life-Span Perspective

Abstract

Language development, training, and maintenance in Down syndrome are a life-long endeavour. Present-day knowledge of the typical profile of the condition with its relative points of strength and weakness can be set in a life-span perspective from the first days of life until the common propensity to earlier physical and cognitive ageing.

Keywords: Spoken language, Down syndrome, life-span.

1Professor, Université de Liège, BELGIQUE & Università Pontificia Salesiana, Venezia, ITALIA
[jeanarondal@skynet.be]